Robert Behre

Robert Behre was born in New Jersey, grew up in Pensacola, Florida. He graduated from Phillips Exeter and then Dartmouth College, where he got a degree in English. Afterward, he began working for the afternoon newspaper in Greenville, S.C. as he figured out what he really wanted to do. He moved to Charleston in 1990, shortly after Hurricane Hugo, to work for what is now The Post and Courier. He has been a reporter and editor covering local, state and national politics, as well as his special interest, architecture and preservation.

In 2019, he moved from the news division to the opinion section where he now works as an editorial writer. He is married to Laura Behre, lives on James Island and has five children.
